

Growth during adolescence is greater than at any other period of life after birth.

Failure to consume an adequate diet can disrupt normal growth and development.

Normal puberty can begin as early as age 8, or as late as age 16.

In general, females begin puberty 2 years before males begin puberty.